Outreach Activities: Self-Assessment for Local Agencies

How do you reach the largest number of potential eligibles as easily as possible?

That's right! By doing outreach activities in your community. Outreach involves the community in the work we do. Outreach encourages the community to refer new eligible customers into our clinics for WIC services. Remember, we only succeed when customers come to WIC and use our services.

Outreach activities include direct outreach to potential customers as well as activities, which strengthen referral networks between WIC and other community services. You know best what type of outreach will work for you and your clinic--what meets the needs and population of your local community. But some outreach activities appear to work well in most communities. Check yourself to be sure you've covered the basics!

1. Have you assessed your community?

Ask yourself these questions:

- (a) Where are your potential eligibles?
- (b) Where in your community can you most likely reach pregnant women, pregnant teens, babies and young children?
- (c) Are you reaching all ethnic groups in your community?
- (d) Are you making special efforts to reach special groups within your community?

For example: Do you outreach to migrant or seasonal farm workers?
Homeless women and children?
Pregnant and parenting teens?

- (e) Have you conducted an outreach campaign specifically targeted at one of the following: a local military base, your community hospital, and a large industry/factory employing women at a minimum wage?

2. Have you created a community resource list?

The agencies and services listed below should be contacted at least once annually and more frequently if possible. Be sure that the eligibility workers and client advocates know about WIC, and that they are referring their customers to the WIC program. Answer their questions! Be sure to give them your name and the address and phone number of all your WIC clinics. Be certain to provide these groups with WIC materials that include your address, telephone number and basic eligibility guidelines.

Also, post a large map of your city, town or county and indicate the location of other agencies, shelters, emergency food pantries, other WIC clinics and as many services as you can include. This helps WIC customers visualize where services are available and make contact.

Agencies to include in a community-resource guide, and to contact:

- . TCA, Food Stamps, medical assistance programs
- . Child-support enforcement
- . Community physicians who take Health Choice patients
- . Credit counseling
- . Developmental screenings/Early Childhood Intervention
- . Early Periodic Screening Diagnosis and Treatment (EPSDT)
- . Educational opportunities
- . Emergency food pantries
- . Family planning services
- . Free and reduced price school lunch programs
- . Head Start
- . Housing services
- . Job banks
- . Licensed child-care facilities
- . Literacy and tutoring programs
- . Community agencies, which provide parenting classes
- . Schools, community agencies that provide parenting for pregnant teens
- . Medical and dental services
- . Migrant-health services
- . Services for children and infants with special needs (children with developmental disabilities, genetic disorders, chronic illness, exposed to drugs perinatally)
- . Shelters for battered women
- . Shelters for homeless families/homeless women and children
- . Substance abuse programs (inpatient or outpatient)
- . Summer lunch program
- . Foster parent programs
- . Protective services or child welfare authorities

3. Have you talked/brain stormed outreach ideas with staff?

Everyone who works for WIC is responsible for outreach. The appointed outreach coordinator "coordinates" outreach activities, but must have everybody's support and hands-on assistance to be effective. Talk about what you can do within the clinic to improve the WIC customer's experience. Satisfied customers are more likely to bring in new participants.

4. Do you talk to your participants?

Ask staff to ask participants to talk about WIC to friends and family members who may be eligible for benefits. Put up a sign in the WIC clinic, which encourages participants to bring in new eligibles.

5. Are you contacting women who have missed their WIC appointment? Are you encouraging them to return to WIC?

Have your most diplomatic and understanding staff member contact the participant, and make it easy for her to return.

6. Have you arranged referrals with prenatal clinics?

Some local agencies station a WIC staff member in large prenatal clinics to make appointments for WIC. Make sure that you visit with prenatal nurses and remind them to please refer their customers to WIC. Be certain they have WIC materials to give their patients. Even if you are co-located, be certain to ask for referrals. With time and turnover, referrals may be overlooked.

7. Have you visited with eligibility and case workers at local Food Stamps, TCA, and social service offices?

Remember, most families receiving these benefits will also qualify for WIC. In many communities, this is the fastest, easiest way to get to the largest group of eligibles. Offer to provide in-service training for caseworkers and be open to receiving information about their programs. The best way to get referrals is to give referrals. Make certain that all WIC customers receive a direct referral to TCA, Food Stamps, and medical assistance programs.

8. Are you providing WIC information and encouraging referrals from other health programs' staff?

Contact and discuss WIC services and referrals with other health programs' staff, such as immunization nurses, regional nutritionists, maternal child health staff, community and migrant health workers.

9. Have you contacted physicians who see patients receiving Health Choice?

Pay special attention to the office staff and nurses of obstetricians, pediatricians and family practitioners. Remember to let each physician know the location of the WIC clinic closest to his or her office. Offer to provide materials, posters and referral forms. You may want to send thank you notes to the physicians who refer to WIC.

10. Are you making personal contact and designing a way of referring all Head Start participants to the WIC program?

Head Start programs usually have a registration fair just before the school year begins. It's a great time to make appointments for WIC.

11. Are you remembering to reach out to working women?

Remember to share WIC eligibility information with city and county employees or other large employers in your area who employ women. Many may be eligible for WIC services.

12. Have you contacted community midwives and given them WIC information for their customers?

You may wish to send a letter or postcard, which informs them about WIC services and gives your number if they want to have materials provided for their customers.

13. Remember to visit with childbirth educators.

Childbirth preparation classes offer a wide range of materials to expectant parents and often have a nutrition component. This is an excellent opportunity to include information on the WIC program. Be sure to inform the educators regarding the benefits of WIC participation, including the information and support available for breastfeeding mothers. Check with your local hospital or local obstetricians to see who offers childbirth preparation classes in your community.

14. Do you talk with local hospital staff about WIC?

Talk with social workers, OB nurses and emergency room nurses about WIC and ask them to refer potential clients. Leave materials with your name and address and telephone number so you can be easily reached.

15. Are you providing WIC information to staff at day care centers and licensed family day care homes in your community?

The staff will likely know who may qualify for WIC. Encourage them to put up posters where their clients will see them, so families have an opportunity to consider if they are eligible for WIC and call for more information. Names and addresses of childcare centers are available from the State Agency.

16. Build partnerships with churches and synagogues in your community.

Religious organizations are usually supportive of the WIC Programs. Because such organizations have community outreach programs of their own, they may have ways in which they can assist WIC in addition to referring potential participants. Be certain that churches have WIC materials to give to families seeking assistance.

17. Contact local shelters and food assistance programs for homeless families and battered women.

Remember to include the Salvation Army, and emergency food-assistance centers, food banks and soup kitchens. Ask for their assistance in referring to the local WIC agency. Do not assume that they know about WIC or the eligibility requirements. Volunteer staff and counselors should receive information on the WIC Program. All shelters should have information about the WIC Program to give to their clients.

18. With permission from grocers, place WIC posters and materials at your local WIC vendors.

Our vendors are a valuable resource. Please check with vendors about placing outreach materials in their stores. Usually privately owned stores are more receptive to placing materials in their stores. Large vendors (e.g. Giant, Weis, etc.) may only allow a small poster on their community bulletin board.

19. Review appointment schedules for evening and or Saturday hours.

Take a moment to review your hours of operation. The working poor are in need of our services but may not be able to take advantage of them because of the agency hours. When conducting targeted outreach to the employed, emphasize the availability of evening and or weekend hours.

20. Check listing in local phone directory.

Looking for someone or someplace? Usually the first place you go is to the phone book. Please take a moment and check your local phone directory to see if the phone number listed for the WIC Program is correct.

SUBJECT: Social Media – Creation of WIC Local Agency Accounts

A. Policy

The term “social media” encapsulates web-based and mobile communications that facilitate the development of social and professional contacts, sharing information, and cooperation on joint activities. Social media is specially designed to exchange user-generated content.

The WIC Program utilizes social media to promote the Program, make information and resources easily accessible, and to develop a virtual community for WIC staff and clients.

Local Agencies may create social media accounts. The following procedures shall guide the development and maintenance of such accounts.

B. Procedure

1. Creation of social media accounts is optional.
2. Local Agencies shall consult with their local Health Department or parent agency for guidance prior to creating social media accounts.
3. All social media accounts shall be created with the assistance of the Communications Team at the State WIC Office.
4. The information provided through social media accounts shall align with the vision and mission of the Maryland WIC Program and present a unified message on behalf of the Program.
5. Each Local Agency shall designate an Account Administrator (individual responsible on behalf of the Local Agency for the creation and administration of accounts) and a Content Moderator (to assist the Account Administrator in the daily monitoring of the account).

6. The Account Administrator and Content Moderator shall have a thorough understanding of public and privacy settings and the guidelines of each social media site. Also, be familiar with the available applications and web-based communities.
7. The Account Administrator must diligently investigate the social media tool, its capabilities, and structure its account accordingly.
8. Social Media accounts shall be restricted as described in Attachment 1.10A
9. A publicly available account shall be monitored continually, as described in Attachment 1.10 A.
10. Each account should have a strong password with 8 characters or greater and uses a combination of letters, numbers, and symbols.
11. Posts should be focused on WIC-related topics from reliable sources where proper credit is provided to the author. All content should be refreshed as needed, with a minimum of weekly. For best practices, see Attachment 1.10B
12. All photos uploaded onto social media applications must have accompanying photo releases for each individual that appears in the photograph. These releases must be stored on file with the Local Agency.
13. All other policies and procedures that apply to computer usage, confidentiality and privacy issues, apply to social media accounts. (P&P 7.40; P&P7.41)
14. Maintenance of WIC accounts is permitted on WIC provided computers. However, administrators and moderators should not open their WIC accounts to other applications as this may compromise the security of the account.
15. All questions shall be referred to the Communications Team at the State WIC Office.

Social Media Account Restrictions

Social media account restrictions and responsibilities are contingent upon the platform in which they are administered and should be followed accordingly.

1. Interaction with State Social Media Accounts

- a. The Maryland WIC Program is on Facebook, Instagram, and YouTube. The State Program's accounts for Facebook and Instagram are @MDH.WIC, and the YouTube account is MarylandWIC.
- b. Every Local Agency which has an account on Facebook, Instagram, or YouTube shall follow the Maryland WIC Program's account on the same platform.
- c. Local Agencies may create accounts on other social media platforms which the Maryland WIC Program does not have a presence on as long as they inform the State Agency and receive permission.

2. Communications with the Public

- a. Local Agencies shall not discuss any participant's individual circumstances, either in public on social media or through a private message.
- b. A Local Agency shall not initiate private communication with any individual person on social media unless that person has specifically invited that communication.
- c. If any individual person wishes to discuss their circumstances, the Local Agency shall give out their phone number and encourage that person to call.

3. Branding

- a. A Local Agency shall use imagery and branding on social media that is consistent with the guidelines set out by the State Agency.

Best Practices for Social Media Use

How can you maximize the potential impact of your social media platforms?

A variety of strategies are needed to capitalize on the endless possibilities created through social media avenues. Successful social media strategies recognize the importance of engaging the target audience with a cohesive inviting approach.

1. Share content from credible sources only!
2. Cultivate a friendly, welcoming, and authentic tone in your communications.
3. Be brief. Users on social media like to scroll through a lot of content and will probably only spend a few seconds looking at what you put up before moving on.
4. Content which you have created yourself will get more attention than content which you have shared from other sources.
5. Do not get into extended back and forth conversations with others on social media. If someone makes a false statement, make a factual correction with a citation to a credible source and do not engage further.

Social media is the new path towards an engaged community. What are you waiting for? Get connected!
